From the Minister

The study abroad initiative of the Australian Government, the New Colombo Plan, is providing a new generation of Australians with practical experience living, studying and gaining workplace skills in the Indo-Pacific region.

These experiences can be transformative, shaping new futures for our students and new opportunities for Australia.

The Australian Government recognises the benefits of a labour force equipped to do business in our region and work placements are a hallmark of the New Colombo Plan.

Internships, mentorships and practicums enable New Colombo Plan students to test their skills in real life situations, build cross-cultural competencies and develop professional networks.

Students return to Australia with the practical skills and maturity to make an early contribution to Australia's engagement with our neighbours and to our national prosperity.

I have been delighted by the enthusiastic embrace of the New Colombo Plan by the business community, which has provided overseas opportunities for young Australians.

Already around half of New Colombo Plan students have complemented their formal studies with a work placement and more than 90 per cent report greater regional literacy and work-readiness on completion of their award.

As the program continues to expand in the years ahead, continued private-sector support and engagement, together with support from Australia's universities, will be critical to its success.

The Hon Julie Bishop MP
Minister for Foreign Affairs

We are driving further engagement with the private-sector and the New Colombo Plan, with the following initiatives:

The New Colombo Plan Internship and Mentorship Network allows organisations to register online their interest in offering work placements to New Colombo Plan students studying overseas.

The Mobility Partners Program is supporting Australian universities to develop innovative partnerships with the private-sector to create new opportunities for New Colombo Plan mobility students.

The New Colombo Plan Business Champions initiative is supporting business leaders to promote the value of regional study and workplace experiences to students' careers and Australia's future prosperity.

These programs support the efforts of universities, business and government to deliver new opportunities for Australian students and to build the future productivity and prosperity of our nation.

New Colombo Plan – At a glance

The New Colombo Plan is driving new connections between Australia and our neighbours by supporting undergraduates to study and intern in up to 38 host locations across the Indo-Pacific.

In 2015 the top locations by student numbers are Indonesia, China, India and Singapore, with other locations growing quickly.

In 2014 and 2015, the NCP has funded more than 4,600 students and will continue to grow in 2016.

More than half of NCP students have undertaken a work placement to support their formal studies – and more than ninety per cent of students say their NCP experience has made them more regionally-literate and work ready.

The NCP is open to undergraduate students from across all academic disciplines, with business, languages, commerce, economics, education, engineering and law among the most popular.

More than 100 organisations are providing internship and mentorship opportunities to NCP students, which are flexible to accommodate the circumstances of each workplace.

What is the New Colombo Plan?

The New Colombo Plan is a signature initiative of the Australian Government which aims to lift knowledge of the Indo-Pacific in Australia by supporting Australian undergraduates to study and undertake professional experiences in the region.

The New Colombo Plan is intended to be transformational, deepening Australia's relationships in the region, as well as ensuring a more regionally-aware Australian workforce for the future.

A large body of Australian alumni with experiences at universities and work places in the Indo-Pacific will deepen our engagement with our neighbours and present considerable opportunities for stronger business, trade, investment, research, education and cultural collaboration.

The ongoing support of the business community in Australia and the region is crucial to the program's ongoing success and the realisation of its potential as a transformative foreign policy initiative.

The New Colombo Plan Internship and Mentorship Network, Mobility Partners Program and Business Champions initiative provide flexible opportunities for businesses in Australia and our region to support the New Colombo Plan and its objectives of driving greater understanding and engagement between Australia and our neighbours.

How to get involved

New Colombo Plan Internship and Mentorship Network

The New Colombo Plan Internship and Mentorship Network is an online portal designed to connect universities, students and private-sector organisations in Australia and the region to progress course-related work experiences under the New Colombo Plan.

As a registered Network member, private-sector organisations can access a diverse talent pool and support students in obtaining professional experience in the region; and universities and New Colombo Plan students can access the opportunities made available by registered organisations.

Mobility Partners Program

The New Colombo Plan Mobility Partners Program encourages universities to develop and foster innovative partnerships with business communities in Australia and across the region to enhance New Colombo Plan student experiences.

For example, a private sector organisation may wish to finance the cost of an additional study period to enable students to have a longer period in-country, or they may wish to match Government funding to enable increased student participation. In-kind and financial sponsorship must go beyond the provision of internships, mentorships and briefings.

Private-sector organisations that provide sponsorship will be recognised as a New Colombo Plan Mobility Partner.

Business Champions

New Colombo Plan Business Champions will help to promote the value of overseas study to students' career prospects and foster business engagement in the program.

The New Colombo Plan will build the number of business champions over time to assist with our communications activities aimed at employers in Australia and the region, undergraduate and high school students and the wider community.

As an Australian company with an ambitious growth strategy in Asia, we see great benefit in programs like the New Colombo Plan that help build connections between Australians starting out their careers and companies operating globally. At Telstra, to deliver on our company strategy we need young workers with the right technical skills combined with a global mindset. This program not only helps individuals build this outlook and a network of contacts outside of Australia, but at the same time the participants we've had work at Telstra have made a meaningful contribution to our priorities today.

Mitsui seeks employees that are culturally aware and open to different cultural experiences. As our business model is constantly evolving we value employees who learn quickly and are able to adjust to the changing needs of our business. The New Colombo Plan provides the workforce of the future with opportunities to develop cross-cultural, interpersonal skills and the ability to adapt to different working environments. These skills are important for all forward thinking companies today.

Living and working in another part of the world, experiencing new cultures, developing new relationships, all helps to empower curiosity, strengthen resilience and develop confidence. As a professional working in a global law firm with multinational clients, these are good core skills to have. The New Colombo Plan promotes collaboration, globalisation and multiculturalism for both private-sector organisations and students, and adds to the important process of enhancing relations and business and economic opportunities across the Indo-Pacific region.
